In January, 1862, I went to Cairo.

In January, 1862, I went to Cairo. The place was a slough without limits, and the human elements that wiggled in the mud-hole were a bad lot. The regiments were mostly of newly-enlisted men, discipline had no existence, whisky supplied the place of water, and nearly every-body was drunk, getting on a drunk or getting over a drunk. There seemed to be nobody in particular who was in authority. Occasionally mention was made of Grant, but not exactly as if he were anything more than a rumor, a myth, or something of a wholly intangible nature. Soon after my arrivial a body of troops commenced crossing the Ohioriver, and the report went forth that it was a move against Columbus. I could obtain no horse and accompanied the columns on foot. The weather was dampandnippingly cold, the mud deep and the route, which was mainly through a timbered country, was obstructed by logs and fallen trees. I struggled on through the mire and under the drooping branches till about three in the afternoon, when suddenly there was a lively commotion a short distance to the front. I saw a mounted force approaching on a full gallop. The leader was a short, thick-set man, slightly bent in the shoulders, with a reddish, close-trimmed beard, tight-set lips, with eyes that were apparently without expression. He gazed straight ahead into vacancy as if he were in a dream and as he rushed by splashed gallons of mud from his horse's feet all over me from hat to heel. The leader, with the trance-like expression, the firm-set lips and look fixed intently upon nothing, was General Grant. It was my first view of the man who afterward rose to the leadership of the armies of the republic. His return was the signal for a counter-march. There was no fight. Long after midnight, mud-covered, fagred out and starvthe republic. His return was the signal for a counter-march. There was no fight. Long after midnight, mud-covered, fagged out and starving, I re-entered Cairo, and the move against Columbus was ended. Many a time and oft after that period when the future general of the national armies covered me with Kentucky mud I saw him. Never during the long period when I met him almost every day and night did he in the least vary from the mysterous, trance-like apparition that dashed out from the murky depths of the timber and disappeared. He was always wrapped up in himself. When he rode through the lines he gazed stolidly to the front, looking neither to the right nor left and seemingly paying no more attention to neither to the right nor left and seemingly paying no more attention to the regiments he was passing than if they were a thousand miles away. The soldiers would look at him curiously, wonderingly, never getting a suggestion from the immobile face, the inscrutable features. When he rode along there was in the event and environment something of the awe, the solemity of a funeral procession.—{Chicago Times. President. Harrison's great-great grandfather, who was one of the regicides of Charles 1., was convicted of high treason. Pepys, in his diary, October 13, 1660 refers in this comforting way to his execution: "I went out to Charing Cross to see Major-General Harrison hanged, drawn, and quartered, which was done there, and he looked as cheerful as any man could in that condition."

Exactly 116 years after this event, President Harrison and the greatgrandson of the good man who de-parted this life in such a gentlemanlike manner, according to Pepys, had just signed the Declaration of Independence in Philadelphia. His had just signed the Declaration of Independence in Philadelphia. His weight was nearly three hundred pounds while that of Elbridge Gerry, who sat beside him was hardly more than that of the late unbefty Alexander H. Stephens. "Gerry," said Harrison, "you'd better not sign that paper. There's been some hanging in my family, and we are somewhat used to it. Moreover I will have another great advantage over you. It will be all over with me in a minute. This ponderosity will crack my neck, while you'll be kicking and squirming about in the air long after I'm gone." But Gerry signed the paper even while he and Harrison roared with laughter.—IBen Perley Poore, in Boston Budget.

Miss Bayard's Clever Retort.

Oscar Wilde knew the late Miss Bayard very well. He was a great admirer of her wit and power of repartee and lost no opportunity to meet her during his stay in Washington. One fine day the capital's society people found themselves interested in two events which were to take place in the evening. One was a lecture by the champion of the sunflower and the other was a brilliant reception. Oscar Wilde met Miss Bayard during the afternoon of the eventual day and she asked him:—

"Mr. Wilde, will you go to the reception to night?"

"Well," he replied, "if I am not too much fatigued after my lecture." A short pause followed and then he said:—

"Miss Bayard of course you will be at the reception?"
"Well," came the answer, "if I am not too much fatigued after your

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE indications of a good sea son this Fall for our stockmen grow stronger every day. If the reports of the drouth in the great cattle belt centering around Chicago are A War of Races Threatened in not exaggerated, the cattle interests of the sagebrush country are on the eve of a decided revival. Authorities agree in saying that the East will look to the Far West for its supply of beef for the next two years, and as the area of the range country is being gradually but surely encroached upon by the farmer, there is certainly good reason for believing that this happy state of affairs will continue thereafter. Being deprived of a home after. Being deprived of a home with Fred and Harvey Mead, his kins-supply, the markets of the East will men, from Aldeo, Illinois, and Frank perforce be compelled to buy in Reidel and G Smith, of Chicago, inlarger quantities in the West. This corporated the company under the demand will afford an outlet for laws of Illin. is, under the name of the the thousands of beef cattle in Eastern Oregon, Idaho and East- pany. A mill was erected and the Eastern Oregon, Idaho and Eastern Nevada, and instead of being forced upon the coast markets as heretofore, we expect to chronicle large shipments towards the rising sun.

DURING Fairweek the GAZETTE will publish an edition of 40,000 copies, and it will be the greatest dates the company's bunk-house, and which were needed in his suit.

Fred and Mr. Hans were in Tre pledras on Friday morning, and on re-copies, and it will be the greatest advertising medium ever presented to the people of Nevada. A series of descriptive articles of Reno in particular and Weshoe county in general will be one of the leading features of the edition, and the articles are now being prepared by competent writers who are thoroughly conversant with the great but neglected resources of Downing heard the commodion and our county. It is the desire of the management to have every business man in Reno represented by an advertisement in the Fair edition of the GAZETTE, and during the present week all who have not already been "interviewed" will be visited by a representative of this journal. Money spent in this way will redound a hundred fold, as every dollar received from advertisers 'will be spent by the management in advertising the resources of our county.

An Ohlo journal defends the infamous bill recently passed by the Georgia Legislature, which imposes fine and imprisonment upon teachers in that State who shall teach white and black children alike. It is the leading Democratic journal in Northern Ohio, and what it says may be taken as Democratic sentiment. It won't be ug before Democratic blowers and strikers will be endeavoring to coax colored men to vote the Democratic ticket, telling them what a great friend the Democratic party is to their race. And occasionally a colored man may be found who will catch at the bait, and lick the hand that smites him, and has smitten his race for generations. But there are not many such.

THE Boston Herald places the President, notwithstanding his want of experience, "head and shoulders above his official family in his knowledge of affairs and his readiness and ability to treat them." The Herald seems to think that the Cabinet might be recast with propriety and benefit to the Administration and country. The Cabinet, it thinks, was an experiment that has not worked well.

The biggest sensation Saco has ever experienced was developed this morning, when it was learned that the ing, when it was learned that the Saco and Bedford saving institution has seriously suffered, financially, through a young clerk, who has abscended. Frank C. McNeilly, 19 years old, has mysteriously dissappeared, taking with him $3,500 in cash and United States bonds to the amount of $185,000, and railroad, municipal and other bonds amounting to about $20,000.

some quarters there is an evident attempt to convey the impression that President Cleveland is inimical to wounded and decrepid veterans of the inte war, and yet he had approved in the past two years more private pension bills than were signed by Republican Presidents in twelve years, and all pensions legislation which was calculated to afford relief to crippled soldiers, or widows and orphans of deceased soldiers, have been gladly approved by him."

A Murderer Guilletined PARIS, August 31. Pranzini, the murderer of Madam Regnault, her maid and her maid's child, was guillotined at 5 o'clock this morning. He made no confession. Vast crowds waited about the place of execution during the whole night and kept up a constant howling and yelling. The din was horrible. When the chaplain, who was to officiate at the execution, arrived at 4:30 a. m. the the execution, arrived at 4:30 A. M. the mass of people was so great he was almost prevented from reaching the gate of the prison. Pranzini marched from his cell to the scaffold with a firm step and defiant air. When the executioners seized him, he resisted and fought desperately, and demanded that they let him alone. The executioners overpowered him and threw him upon the machine and in an instant had him securely bound. Immediately after the terrible knife was started. It descended with a horrible slowness at first, but then quickened and the head of the murderer rolled into the basket. The mob became very disorderly during the progress of the execution.

The "News" on Chambertain.

LONDON, August 31. Joseph Chamberlain is expected to go to America at the close of the present session of Parliament, and has decided to abandon his visit to Ulster The News, commenting on the appointment of Chamberlain as a member of the Fisheries Commission, says: The appointment of the Commission is an important fact, but that of this an important fact, but that of this Commissioner eclipses it in interest. That the Government had an eye to its own advantage is a perfectly safe calculation, and it was obviously desirable to have him out of the way. We congratulate him and the country, and felicitate him upon his clever escape from the toils of the Tories. Francis Sharp Powell, member of Parliament for Wigan, and the Earl of Dunraven, will probably accompany Chamberlain to America as members of the Fisheries Commission. It is likely that Jessie Colings, member of Parliament for Birmingham, will also be one of the party, but in an unoffi-motion in a Palace Car.

Amusing incidents are of daily corrence at the depot in Reno. The passengers who arrive from the East are generally tired and hungry, and when the train stops here they hurry at once in search of food and refreshments, regardless of their personal appearance. Some, however, prefer to remain in the cars and have their provender brought to them. The other night a tray laden with victuals was taken into laden with victuals was taken into one of the sleeping cars, and the train started before the hungry person had finished his repast. The colored porter, who was responsible to the hotel for the tray and dishes, grabbed the same, upsetting in his haste a pot of scalding tea over the tourist's new trousers. As the porter reached the end of the sleeper he encountered several people coming, and, as the passage is very narrow, his progress was much impeded. He raised the tray as high above his tread as he could reach, however, and "breasted the tide." The edge of the tray knocked off the first man's plug hat and struck the next man in the eye. In a freuzy of pain and passion he violently threw up his hands, and struck the tray with such force that the entire contents—cup, saucer, pudding, soup, etc. came down on the perspiring dar-ky's head, much to his disgust and to the amusement of the outsiders, who had a full view of the entire performance through the car win-dows. The fate of the tray is still a

Cutting Affray. Sunday afternoon, says the Elko Independent, a difficulty occurred between Jim Mulligan and John Eddy which came near being a serious affair. The two men had a slight misunderstanding and some hard words ensued at the Humboldt House saloon, but after a time Eddy went out and sat down and apparently the trouble was ended. Suddenly, however, Mulligan rushed out with an open pocket knife, made a lunge at Eddy, striking him in the left breast. The blade of the knife entered the flesh and fortunately struck a rib which closed it and thereby a dangerous and perhaps fatal wound was averted. Mulligan was promptly arrested and committed to jail. Eddy is up and around and thinks no serious results will follow. hard words ensued at the Humboldt

A Good Scheme. A bald-headed man, who has male a study of the fly question, noticed that a fly always walks upward. Put a fly upon a window and he goes toward the top; he can't be made to walk downward. So he hit upon an idea. Forthwith he made a window screen divided in half. The upper half lapped over the lower with an inch of space between. Well, as soon as a fly would light on the screen he would preceed to travel upward and would thus walk straight outdoors. On reaching the top of the lower way to return to the room. By this means a room can be quickly cleared of flies which always seek the light.

Alfalfa at the East The rapidity with which the cultivation of alfalfs is spreading through the United States is not one of the least marvels of agriculture of this age. The bistory of the introduction of this unexcelled forage plant is a familiar one here. When stories of its remarkable productiveness were told at the East, how it yielded at the rate of 10 or 15 tons to the acre every year, they were set down as fit companions to the other tales of enormous grain and fruit crops which were believed to have no other foundation than the imagination. For a long time it was supposed that al-falfa could only be successfully grown in a semi-tropical climate, and that frosts was fatal to it. But from California it spread to Colorado and Utab, where the temperature is often anything except tropical, and during the last two or three years experiments have been made with the plant in many of the made with the plant in many of the far Eastern States. At the New Jersey State Agricultural Experimental Station alfalfa has been successfully cultivated, and in a recent report from that institution it is stated that of all the forage plants there grown, lucerne is one of the eurliest to mature, and, besides, offers other advantages which few other plants possess. When once well rooted it withstands both drouth and frost in a remarkable manner. At the place referred to it was cut three or four times in the season and yielded a large crop each time.

A writer in a recent number of the care should be sown, and it is also advised to sow in the Fall.

A writer in a recent number of the Rural Press also advises sowing in the Fall, in time for the plants to get a fair start before the advent of frosty weather. This custom, however, does not seem to obtain as yet to any great extent, in California at all events. The period chosen most frequently here period chosen most frequently here is early in the Spring, as all reasonable danger from frost shall have passed. Alfalfa is also recommended by the same writer as an expellent corrective for alkalı lands, and and some remarkable successes have been achieved in this direc-

It is generally supposed that alfalfa needs large quantities of water for its successful growth. This is not so. Of course, heavier and more frequent crops can be secured where there is plenty of water for irrigation. But even without that aid there is no plant which will withstand drought and yield heavier crops than alfalfa. Ou the dry and arid plains of Kanass it can be cut at least three times each season without being irrigated, and this is the general experience where irrigation is not practiced. In Colorado experiments have been made with alfalfa as bee for age and it is said with excellent reprovable continuous residence upon and age and it is said with excellent results. The bees leave other bloom for this, and the honey is excelled by none either in flavor or color. Honey made from alfalfa is even said to be far superior to the whitesaid to be far superior to the white-sage honey of California. As the alfalfa should be cut, however, soon after it blooms, it would hardly pay to raise the plant for bee feed alone. Hence it would be well to have several patches and to cut them at different times, so as to afford as nearly a continual succession of bloom as possible.
